The Frank Lloyd Wright Oak Park self guided walking tour provides an ideal setting to understand the core tenets of the Prairie School architectural movement, with Frank Lloyd Wright as its undisputed leader. His Oak Park creations are the living embodiments of this influential style.

Key Characteristics

The Prairie School style, as seen in Oak Park, is characterized by several defining features that set it apart from previous architectural norms. These include:

- Strong horizontal lines that echo the flat landscape of the American prairie.
- Broad, overhanging eaves that provide shelter and visually connect the building to the ground.
- Low-pitched or hipped roofs, often with intersecting gables.
- Open floor plans that promote a sense of flow and interconnectedness between interior spaces.
- The use of natural materials such as wood, brick, and stone, often left in their natural state.
- Large expanses of glass, including bands of casement windows, to bring the outdoors in.
- Integrated ornamentation, often featuring geometric patterns inspired by nature.
- A central hearth as the symbolic and functional heart of the home.

Wright's Architectural Philosophy

During his time in Oak Park, Frank Lloyd Wright was developing his philosophy of "organic architecture." This concept, central to the Prairie School, posits that a building should grow harmoniously from its site, with its form, materials, and furnishings all integrated into a unified whole. Wright believed that architecture should serve the needs of the people living within it, promoting a sense of well-being and connection to the environment. His early designs in Oak Park were instrumental in articulating this vision, moving away from the rigid, compartmentalized spaces of Victorian homes towards a more fluid, human-centered design.
