Theological Foundations of God's Ongoing Communication

The belief that God continues to speak to humanity is rooted in various theological doctrines spanning both Old and New Testament scriptures. Within Christian theology, the concept of divine revelation is not limited to ancient texts but is understood as an ongoing process. This view holds that God's nature as a living and active being means He continues to communicate through multiple means such as scripture, prophecy, visions, and inner promptings of the Holy Spirit. illustrate the work of the Holy Spirit actively guiding the early church. These biblical foundations establish a precedent for modern believers to expect and recognize God's communication in their lives.
